

Acknowledgments and report, December 2008

Jonathan Baron, Editor

Here are some approximate statistics for acceptance and rejection. “Limbo” means that the status is unknown, e.g., was returned to the author without being totally rejected and the author has not responded.

	All submissions	2008 submissions
Published	113	28
Rejected	70	25
Accepted	7	5
Under review	13	13
Limbo	8	6

The publication lag is typically quite short. Beginning in March 2007, article numbers (as reflected in the links to them) are codes representing the date of submission. For example, 7308 is the paper submitted on March 8, 2007. Sometimes reviews are slow in coming, and sometimes authors take a long time to respond to them. I have not bothered to calculate the various times involved in these stages.

In addition, as noted elsewhere, Adam Kramer and Alan Schwartz drafted computer scripts to produce the new indices and the files required for indexing by RePEc. And I remain indebted to the many writers of the open-source software that make the production process possible and sometimes even fun: LaTeX (and associated programs), OpenOffice, Writer2LaTeX (especially), Xemacs, Firefox, Hevea, Perl, Linux, and other GNU software.

Errata

First, this report was not included when this issue was announced. Because of that I intend to include it again in the next issue.

Second, the following article contains non-substantive corrections made by the authors:

Vlaev, I., Chater, N., & Stewart, N. (2007). Relativistic financial decisions: Context effects on retirement saving and investment risk preferences. Judgment and Decision Making, 2, 292–311.
